

Barn Chic

By: Sydney Richardson-Forrest

When designing a space for an entryway or a foyer you want to have a statement piece that people would talk about. Also in a entryway or foyer you want to have items that are useful. So in my design I wanted to create a unique light fixture that will get your guest talking.

My idea for light fixture when I saw all my old hangers in my closet and hangers I had since I was little. It was also time to give up my hangers too. The other materials used to build the light fixture was jute rope I had leftover from other project, a old lamp that was in my room, a used cutting board from Goodwill, brought the light bulb and furniture nails from Walmart. To assemble my light fixture I had to cut apart my old lamp base and drill a hole at the bottom of my cutting board to create my new base for my lamp. After that I placed my lamp fixture into the base, attach my hangers vertically to my lamp fixture and added jute rope around my lamp shade, between the hangers and at the bottom of the hangers.

This lamp will be a great statement piece in any foyer or entryway for a family that is busy and needs somewhere to put their keys so they don't loose them and can place those keys on the hooks of the hangers and a light fixture that is unique and brings life into space.
